Imputing Income

In the case In re Marriage of Thompson, the trial court imputed an income of $40,000.00 to the husband who had a history of unemployment and little to no earnings during the marriage. The husband appealed, and the appellate court affirmed the trial court's decision. The appellate court stated that when "awarding maintenance and child support, the court must consider the earning capacities of the parties." The trial court has a duty to make its own calculations of the parties' income, and in this case the trial court did not abuse its discretion when imputing $40,000.00 income for the \(Read more\)
